Abney Park is one step closer to securing around £5million in lottery funding for a major restoration project; the Gothic splendour of Abney Park chapel re-opened on 3 August after having extensive structural repairs to its roof and stonework; William Booth is buried at the cemetery

Magnificent Abney

ABNEY Park, one of London's 'Magnificent Seven' cemeteries, is one step closer to securing nearly £5million in lottery funding for a major restoration project.

Situated in Stamford Hill, the park contains the oldest surviving non-denominational chapel in Europe. This was reopened last August after extensive structural repairs to its roof and stonework.

Now, the Council and partners Abney Park Trust and Abney Park User Group have been successful in the first round of bidding for Heritage Lottery Fund and Big Lottery Fund money to improve the park, cemetery and chapel. This means the project will receive nearly £315,000 to help develop a round two bid.

Some 200,000 souls are laid to rest in the cemetery, once a landscaped masterwork, now a much-loved wilderness in the heart of urban London.

Among the graves are some of the affectionately-titled 'heroes of Abney' including General William Booth, founder of the Salvation Army; William Pennington, survivor of the Charge of the Light Brigade; and Victorian music hall performer George Leybourne, who sang 'The Daring Young Man on the Flying Trapeze'.

Once parkland owned by the Abney family, the 32-acre graveyard was created in 1840 by the Abney Park Cemetery Company and designed by William Hoskins, a professor of architecture at King's College London.

The park became known as one of London's Magnificent Seven cemeteries, which also include Highgate, Brompton and Kensal Green. They were set up in the mid-19th century to alleviate dangerous overcrowding in the capital's churchyards.

Indeed, visitors to Abney can tour more than 25,000 statues and monoliths peppered around the site, from the marble sleeping lion (pictured above), which guards the grave of Frank Bostock, a travelling animal showman who kept his giraffes in nearby Yoakley Road, to the war memorial which commemorates the civilian dead of the Second World War.

The Council asked park users for their thoughts on what improvements they would like to see as part of the project. Proposals include further restoration work to the chapel; making entrance gates more accessible; creating space for an on-site masonry and woodworking studio; and restoring the park's lodges to create space for educational projects, a cafe and forest school.

If successful with a second round application, further restorative work to the chapel will allow the building to be used for community events such as music concerts and theatre productions.

The Council now has until June next year to further develop the bid.

Bedroom to battleground

The artworks on display have been created by members of Project Indigo, a local LGBTQI+ youth group; images from last year's launch of the Council's Hackney Pride 365 festival (right) at Hackney Museum

FOR the first time in over a decade, Hackney Museum will host an LGBT History Month exhibition celebrating the borough's historic, diverse and boundary-breaking LGBTQI+ (Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Queer, Intersex plus) community.

From 1 February until 8 May visitors can view the two displays that make up the exhibition 'From Bedroom to Battleground' and 'Out and About'.

'From Bedroom to Battleground' has been created by Project Indigo, a local LGBTQI+ youth group run by Off Centre, a mental health and

"I'm pleased together we've started to capture and celebrate the experiences of Hackney's LGBTQI+ residents" wellbeing charity. The 'Out and About' display is a collaborative wallpaper design project between artist Angela Groundwater and Out and About, an LGBTQI+ over 50s group.

The exhibition was developed in tandem with a year-long drive by Hackney Museum to collect historical material from the borough's LGBTQI+ community. To date, this has resulted in 13 oral histories being collected, 10 volunteers trained, and a number of artefacts donated.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, said: "I'm excited we're hosting this exhibition; when we relaunched LGBT History month last year we asked residents to get involved and tell us their stories. I'm pleased that together we've started to capture and celebrate the experiences of Hackney's LGBTQI+ residents, especially giving voice to older residents who fought so hard for the freedoms we now enjoy."

The Council will also host a LGBT History Month closing event on 28 February. The evening will celebrate the achievements – delivered with the help of the borough's LGBTQI+ community – of the Council's Hackney Pride 365 festival last year, and announce further plans for this year.

News in brief

Obituary of ex-councillor and campaigner Cam Matheson

CAMPBELL Robertson McKay Matheson – or 'Cam' as he became known to his countless friends in Hackney – was born in Penicuik, a Scottish town dominated by its paper mill and coal mining industry.

Cam left school at 15, eventually hitch-hiking to London, and found work as a chambermaid. He was soon leading a protest over the poor food served to staff in the hotel. Aged 29 and without qualifications, Cam applied to study politics at the University of Sussex, where he was not only accepted, but appointed president of the student union. An affronted Daily Telegraph reported at the time that a communist had been elected to the role.

It was a fruitful appointment. Cam was instrumental in the establishment of the Mandela Scholarship scheme for black South African students, still run by the University today. But Cam was not to finish his studies.

Offered a job with the Association of Scientific, Technical and Managerial Staffs, he abandoned his degree and went to work for the white-collar union in Camden. It proved a good choice, as it was here that he met his wife, Julia. The couple set up home in Hackney, where Cam became a passionate advocate for the rights of political refugees fleeing Turkey, helping many to set up home in the borough. He also fought to rescue the dilapidated shell of Sutton House, now a National Trust property.

In the 1990s, while serving as first a Labour and then an independent councillor, Cam found yet another cause: the state of Hackney's streets. His tireless work brought about the introduction of more litter bins, new road-sweeping machines and better recycling facilities across the borough. Cam leaves behind his wife, two children and two granddaughters, as well as a cleaner, fairer, more just society.

Changes to Hackney's Council Tax benefit scheme approved

THE Council Tax Reduction Scheme is set to change from April, with the minimum contribution a working age household would have to pay increasing from 15 to 17 per cent.

The means tested benefit helps over 27,000 residents to pay their Council Tax. Hackney currently invests over £25million in the scheme but receives just £8.6million from the Government, despite it formerly being a national benefit fully funded by central Government.

Mayor of Hackney, Philip Glanville, said: "The Council consulted on increasing the minimum contribution a working age household would have to pay from 15 to 20 per cent. We met with charities and organisations and received about 150 responses to the consultation. These understandably raised concerns about the impact of the increase, and while we share those concerns, none of the decisions we have to take around the Council's budget are easy.

"However, we have listened and that's why we changed the proposal to agree a two per cent increase, so the minimum amount that working age adults will have to pay is now 17 per cent of their total bill. This two per cent increase will cover the £500,000 increase in providing the scheme next year.

"We will also increase awareness of the CTRS hardship fund to further support those who still face difficulties, and review our approach to debt, advice and support."

New homes could save renters £10,000 a year

The first 'living rent' homes are due to be part of the Bridge House scheme in Homerton High Street (CGI above)

LOCAL people struggling with record rents and house prices are set to benefit from modern new homes at a genuinely affordable living rent under Council plans.

The new homes could see eligible renters save nearly £10,000 a year on the average two-bedroom flat, helping them to build up a deposit to buy a first home.

Under plans approved by the Council on 22 January, living rents would be set at a third of average local incomes, which could be around £1,000 per month for a two-bedroom property. The average equivalent market rent in Hackney is around £1,800 per month.

Living rent criteria:

- Rent or work in Hackney
- Have a maximum household income of £60,000
- Be unable to buy a home in Hackney

“These homes for living rent will help those struggling to stay in Hackney or save for their first home”

The Council will let and manage the homes – through a separate, not-for-profit company – meaning that as well as a discounted rent, tenants won't face unwarranted fees or excessive rent increases.

Building homes for living rent is part of the Council's #BetterRenting campaign to improve standards and affordability for private renters in Hackney.

Successes so far include pressuring the Government into banning letting fees and introducing Hackney's own voluntary ban, as well as a consultation on extending property licensing to tackle rogue landlords.

More than 34,000 homes are privately rented in Hackney – around a third of all households – with rents rocketing 36 per cent since 2011 and letting agents charging an average of £400 in fees per tenancy.

Philip Glanville, Mayor of Hackney, said: “Too many people in Hackney, especially young renters, work hard and save hard, but are struggling to make ends meet because of rocketing rents in the private sector.

“These homes for living rent will help those struggling to stay in Hackney, or save for their first home, putting an extra £800 on average in their pocket every month to save towards a deposit.

“We're building thousands of new Council homes for those most in need, and I'm proud that our living rent will expand our offer to help those who aren't eligible for social housing but still need a hand to find a genuinely affordable place to live.”

To apply, residents must be renting or working in Hackney, have a household income of less than £60,000 and be unable to buy a home in their local area. The homes will not be available to buy.

Due to Government restrictions – which don't allow the Council to directly own homes for living rent – it will set up a not-for-profit company to do so.

Any surplus income generated will be reinvested in house building. This company will not build homes itself, but will acquire homes that are being built through the Council's regeneration programme, that would otherwise have been for outright sale or shared ownership.

Discounted rents will be subsidised by letting some of the properties at market rates, with all homes let on longer tenancies than the average home in the private sector in order to provide stability for tenants.

More details are set to be published in the next few months.

Shape the future of Shoreditch

RESIDENTS are being invited to help shape the future of Shoreditch by having their say on an area action plan.

The 'Future Shoreditch Plan' is set to guide new development in the area over the next 15 years. It aims to protect and enhance the unique character of Shoreditch by carefully curating the ongoing demand for space. Shoreditch has experienced phenomenal growth over the past 30 years, becoming one of the world's fastest growing arts, fashion, media and technology-led areas. It is also home to thousands of residents and the demand for space is intense, which is continuing to push up workspace and residential rents.

Cllr Guy Nicholson, Cabinet Member for Planning, Business and Investment, said: “Shoreditch has a unique heritage and it's a highly desirable place to live and to base a business. It is very important that future growth is sensitively managed for this very special place.” Consultation drop-in sessions at the Shoreditch Opportunity Hub, Bowling Green Walk, will be held on 1 and 7 February, from 6pm to 8pm.

Premises licence revoked after illegal tobacco haul

A HOXTON store had its premises licence revoked after a stash of illegal tobacco was found hidden behind a till.

The haul, made up of nearly four kilos of loose tobacco and 428 individual cigarettes, was found by the Council's trading standards officers at Hoxton Supermarket, in Hoxton Street, after a tip-off from a member of the public. In addition to the 3.7kg of illegal tobacco behind the till, open cigarette packets were also discovered, indicating the shop could have been selling single cigarettes, which make it cheaper for children to start smoking.

The tobacco did not have health warnings on the packet – a legal requirement – nor were they in plain packaging. In a separate trading standards operation, Hoxton Supermarket was also found to have sold alcohol to children under the age of 18.

Residents concerned about a shop near them stocking illegal tobacco, or selling alcohol to children, should visit: www.hackney.gov.uk/trading-standards; or call: 020 8356 4929.

"I lived in Rachel Point with my parents when I was 16. It was so modern at the time, it seemed to be the future. My dad had become pretty much incapacitated by a heart attack. The theory was, he could use the lift in this brand-new block of flats. In fact, the lift kept breaking down. Many people just got stranded. The heating broke down too. I had this idea to take photos of everyone in the block. I have just six to eight surviving pictures, but it's the décor I find fascinating now. That, and the fact that many people look very happy to be there. They had come from far worse housing. But the blocks were knocked down about 25 years later, because they weren't built to last."

Low Lesson the Barber (below)

"This was taken in 1974. Mr Lesson, the barber, was a really lovely man who worked in Shacklewell Lane. People had been coming to him for years and years, and in some cases had very little hair to cut. But he would still pay huge attention to how he did it. He was very proud of what he did, a very gentle and kind man. He would go and visit his older or disabled customers, cut their hair at home and not charge them. He was very fastidious, too, spotlessly clean. Hackney Museum now has his barber's chair on display."

Another time, another place

Neil Martinson's exhibition at Stour Space captures Hackney during the 1970s BROKEN down and bombed out houses provided endless adventures," says photographer Neil Martinson, describing the Hackney of his 1970s childhood.

Adding: "Rag and bone men would tour the streets on a horse and cart, ringing a bell with their indecipherable cry. The odd car in a street was a sight to behold and we would swoon in admiration."

Hackney may have changed a good deal since, but a new exhibition of Martinson's work is set to conjure those days back to life. Called 'Another Time Another Place', the show at Stour Space in Hackney Wick resurrects over 60 of his photographs,

"The odd car in a street was a sight to behold and we would swoon in admiration" in what the gallery is describing as 'possibly the largest collection of unseen Hackney images from the 70s and 80s'. Now a renowned photographer, Martinson first picked up a camera while a boy at Hackney Downs School.

He says: "I was inspired by my trips to Stoke Newington Library. It was a forbidding place with fierce librarians whose glance could kill if the slightest noise was made. But hidden on the shelves were photographic books of an exciting world beyond the confines of my council flat."

He took a Saturday job at Woolworths on Stoke Newington High Street in order to save for his first ever camera.

Martinson recalls: "Each week I would look in awe at the window of North London Cameras and the wondrous display of cameras. The best I could manage on my meagre saving was a Russian made Zenith E. But it was everything that a boy could want from a camera."

Lens in hand, he began to roam the streets experimenting with his new

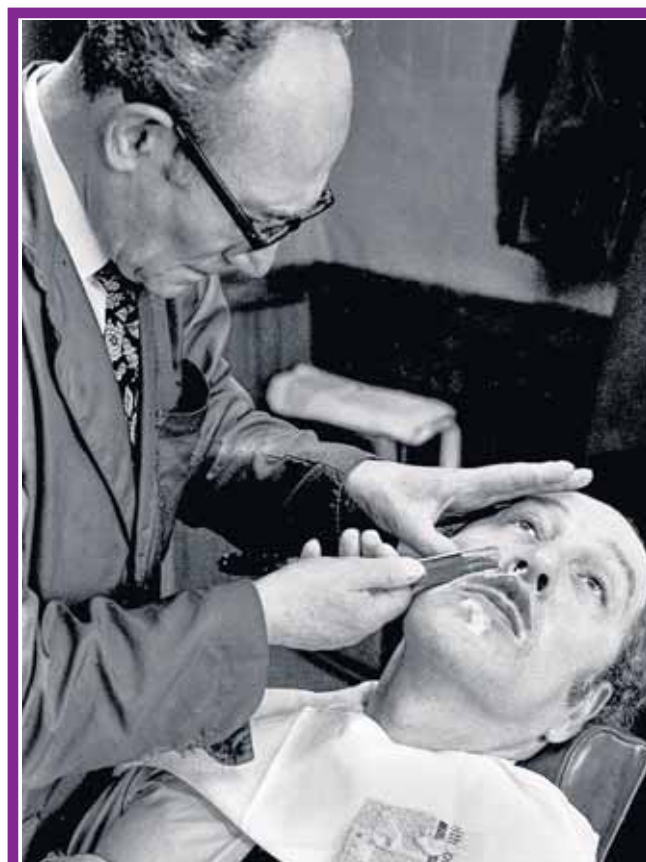

toy. The resulting photos might be rougher than those produced by the mature photographer, and which now hang in hallowed spaces like the National Portrait Gallery.

But today, they exert a ghostly power to transport you back to Hackney as it was when, Martinson says: "Down and outs would try and sell their own tatty, shredded clothes and crowds would throng round stalls selling food well past its use by date."

Another Time Another Place is at Stour Space from 1 to 23 February. It is open daily from 9am to 5pm and entrance is free.

Bethnal Green Road (below)

"This is one of the first pictures I ever took in my life. Back then, I was often attracted to markets because they're such bustling, public places. I love the clothing people are wearing in this, but actually it could be quite a sad place, people would come just to sell their own clothes. There's been some sentimentalisation about the way the East End used to be and I think a lot of it is misplaced: in that period of time, there was a lot more poverty, the living conditions were pretty grim."

"This was taken during one of the rent-capping demonstrations, when the Town Hall was effectively occupied. The people stormed in, whilst there was a debate by councillors about whether or not they should set a rate. In the late 70s the Council was still very remote from what was going on in the borough. Suddenly, people began to take action and speak up. The Council had to take notice of them, and it changed things."

"What I love about this picture is that they both look so self-assured and in charge of what they're doing. It was common to see children playing on the streets in the 1970s. The lack of traffic, and very different attitudes, gave children a freedom that seems quite remote now. My own memory as a child was of 'going out to play' all day long and my parents having no idea of where I was or what I was doing."

Homeless (left)

"This was taken in 1981, when families from Hackney were being rehoused in these really appalling bed and breakfast hotels in Finsbury Park. I went in and took photos and they were published in a booklet called 'Homeless in Hackney', along with a list of policy recommendations. Not least among them was that they should stop using these overcrowded, dangerous hotels. We presented it to the Council, and it changed its policy."

Lesney's Matchbox Factory (below)

"In the 70s and 80s Hackney still had a manufacturing base. The largest by far was Lesney's on the River Lea, where hundreds of mostly women made Matchbox cars. Their shifts were arranged so they could fit in their childcare needs and a fleet of double-decker buses would transport them to and from work."

THE GREEN GENIE

All your green questions answered

Q: I saw in the news that China has announced they will no longer accept plastics for recycling from overseas. Does this mean the plastic I put in my recycling will get sent to landfill now?

A: Hackney's recycling gets sorted at two material recovery facilities in Edmonton and Bow, along with six other London boroughs. These facilities send almost all their plastics to UK reproprocessors, so the Chinese restrictions are not expected to affect Hackney's plastic recycling. The most important thing is to make sure you only put plastic bottles, tubs and trays in the recycling. Some other plastics, including plastic film, bags and wraps cannot be recycled.

Have your say on a consultation to help reduce pollution by banning high emission vehicles in two zones in Shoreditch

Low-emission streets

HACKNEY and Islington councils are consulting on a scheme which could see all but the cleanest vehicles banned from two zones in Shoreditch.

The scheme would mean that petrol, diesel and older hybrid vehicles would not be allowed to enter nine streets during the peak commuter periods of 7am to 10am and 4pm to 7pm, Monday to Friday.

Ultra low emission vehicles like electric cars, e-bikes, the newest hybrids and hydrogen vehicles, as well as pedestrians and cyclists, will be allowed.

Cllr Feryal Demirci, Cabinet Member for Neighbourhoods, Transport and Parks, said: "The streets around Shoreditch suffer from some of the worst air quality in London. Ultra low emission streets will have reduced levels of air and noise pollution, make it easier and safer to walk and cycle and improve the character of the area for all residents and businesses.

"To start with we're proposing to ban petrol and diesel vehicles in the morning and evening rush hours to reduce people's exposure to dangerous fumes and make the streets safer when people are walking and cycling to and from work and school.

"Our ultimate goal is to reclaim the streets from polluting motor vehicles: this ground breaking scheme is the first step towards doing that."

Residents and businesses in the streets affected would still be able to use their cars.

The consultation closes on 14 February.

Reduce carbon emissions with a renewable energy website

HOW many times a day do you type a word into Google, or click send on an e-mail? Each time we use the internet we are generating carbon emissions.

In fact, it is estimated that the ICT industry generates 830 million tonnes of carbon dioxide every year. That's two per cent of all global emissions, and the figure is rising rapidly.

One Hackney businessman is waging war on that pollution. Dalston resident Ben Clifford spent a decade working at a major multinational software company before, he explains: "I noticed there was a real lack of awareness around how the ICT sector contributes to the problem. People tend not even to know that websites can create emissions until I mention it to them."

As a result, last year he founded Erjio a web-design business. Ben offers his customers a hosting plan that makes sure that their websites are powered by 100 per cent renewable energy.

Ben explains that data centres are required to house the world's websites. They need a vast amount of energy to keep them online, but most are still powered by fossil fuels. In fact, these data centres are predicted to produce 1.9 gigatons of CO2 annually by 2025, the equivalent of running 400 million cars for a year.

HACKNEY youngsters are well on the way to becoming model citizens after learning how to keep safe as part of the Junior Citizens scheme at Hackney Museum.

Now in its tenth year, the scheme, which is run by the London Transport Museum and is free for all schools, is aimed at children about to make the transition to secondary school.

Nearly 2,300 Hackney pupils took part in this year's Junior Citizens scheme, with 52 schools getting involved over a four-week period.

The scheme promotes good health and safety using a series of 10-minute workshops on road safety, dental health, fire safety, caring for animals, balanced diets, and travelling sensibly on public transport.

Each workshop was staffed by volunteers from the Council, Transport for London, the Dogs Trust, Blue Cross animal charity, Wood Green Animal Shelter, Hackney Police, and the London Fire Brigade.

Jemelle, a Year 6 student at Millfields Community School, E5, said: "Learning about how to be safe at bus stops was really important because I've been pushed into the road before so it was good to find out the best way to wait."

Fellow student Mackenzie added: "I liked learning about how to care for the animals the most: I love learning about dogs."

Petchey pupils make it to the finals in Mandarin competition

STUDENTS from The Petchey Academy, E8, have beaten schools from across the country in a competition designed to test their linguistic powers.

Over 50 schools entered the HSBC Mandarin Speaking Competition. Launched by the British Council, the contest aims to allow students to practise and improve their Mandarin Chinese.

In a London-wide heat, the six Petchey Academy students were asked to write, practise and perform a five-minute play, not only including Chinese themes, but delivering it in Mandarin.

Jacob Farley, Joshua Honeyghan-Teves, Olivia McFarlane, Harsimran Kaur, Oliver Hunt and Louis Roberts were one of two teams from non-selective schools to make it through to the national final, which will be held on 7 February at the British Museum. The winning team will be rewarded with a week-long trip to China. Year 10 student Louis said: "It was easy for me to perform and speak Chinese for five minutes because it was so much fun working as a team. Our performance was wacky and fun. I hope we can win so that I can visit China and get to experience the culture."

Students from The Petchey Academy are through to the national final of the Mandarin Speaking Competition

New English courses to help migrants into employment

EIGHT new English for Employment courses have been set up across the borough to support migrants into work. The courses are free and open to residents who would like to move into work or progress on to a better job.

As well as sessions in the classroom, students get one-to-one support from a Hackney Works employment adviser and have the chance to get some relevant work experience by volunteering for a local charity.

Cllr Carole Williams, Cabinet Member for Employment, Skills and Human Resources, said: "The new English for Employment courses are designed to help migrants achieve a higher level of English and learn more about work in the UK in order to gain employment or move in to a better job."

The courses form part of the Integrated Communities programme, funded by the Department for Communities and Local Government.

There are a range of morning, afternoon and evening classes available across the borough. For more info, visit: www.learningtrust.co.uk/esol; e-mail: esol@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8820 7043.

Time To Talk Day takes place on 1 February and encourages people to talk about mental health

It's time to talk

RESIDENTS are being encouraged to take time in their day on 1 February to talk with friends and family about mental wellbeing.

'Time To Talk Day' is a national campaign that aims to challenge the idea that it's difficult to talk about mental health.

Every year, one in four people in the UK will experience some form of mental health problem, and having a chat is a great way to provide a bit of support.

There's no right or wrong way to get involved: every conversation about mental health helps normalise it as a subject.

One way to have more conversations is to volunteer. The Volunteer Centre Hackney lists many opportunities in the borough.

In fact, volunteering is one of the five steps that Hackney's Clinical Commissioning Group lists in its 'Five To Thrive' campaign to improve mental health in the borough. Other positive steps being encouraged as part of the campaign are 'connect', 'be active', 'take notice' and 'keep learning'.

Positive mental health posters drawn by Hackney pupils. 1 & 2. Skinners' Academy; 3. Berger Primary School; 4. Skinners' Academy Five To Thrive is being promoted in Hackney schools with resources to support better mental health in children and young people. As part of this, a mental health worker is set to be based in every school in the borough.

Charity awarded funding to support elderly carers

A CHARITY supporting the Orthodox Jewish community has been awarded £87,300 to boost its programme supporting elderly carers in Hackney and Haringey. Stamford Hill-based charity, Bikur Cholim, was awarded the funding by City Bridge Trust, the City of London Corporation's charitable arm.

The grant will fund the charity's health and wellbeing programme for carers over the age of 65 in response to an increasing number of older carers struggling to cope, resulting in poor physical and mental health.

The money will fund a new Carers Support Worker for older people who will provide advice, support, rest and relaxation through respite activities.

For more info on Bikur Cholim, visit: www.bikurcholim.co.uk; or call: 020 8800 7575.

No ifs, no butts: smokers encouraged to throw away their cigarettes in ballot bins

NEW ballot bins have been installed in Hackney that prompt people to dispose of their cigarette butts by answering a yes/no question.

The new bins have been placed in Hoxton Square and Mark Street Gardens in Shoreditch and pose questions like 'who is the best player in the world,

Ronaldo or Messi?'

A fine of £70 can be issued to anyone caught dropping their cigarette butts or any other smoking-related litter on the ground. To help avoid this, pouches will also be given out to members of the public. The pouches include details about the Hackney

Stop Smoking Service.

Mathis Brunovs, who works in Hackney, said: "I think the ballot bins are a good way of trying to get people to put cigarettes in the right place."

Cllr Jonathan McShane, Cabinet Member for Health, Social Care and Devolution, added: "Introducing the new ballot bins and pouches is about more than keeping areas clean. They are also effective measures to raise awareness of the support and advice available for people who want to quit cigarettes for good. Smoking costs Hackney £65million a year, killing more than 200 people."

The ballot bins are part of a range of measures by the Council to help keep areas and green spaces clean across Hackney.

For confidential, expert advice and support to stop smoking, contact Hackney's Stop Smoking Service on: 0800 046 9946; or: 020 3316 1085; or go to: www.smokefreehackney.org

The Mayor and councillors

Councillors are elected by residents and serve for four years. The last borough-wide elections took place in May 2014. Councillors have a range of responsibilities, including helping to oversee Council services.

They hold advice surgeries where residents can meet their local representative and ask them to take up issues of concern. Generally they can help with Council related matters, but if the issue is the responsibility of another person or organisation, councillors can often point people in the right direction and tell residents who they need to see.

Hackney has 57 councillors representing areas called wards – see map below.

MAYOR PHILIP GLANVILLE

Hackney's executive Mayor Philip Glanville was directly elected by the borough in 2016. He is the political leader of the Council, overseeing the budget and all Council services. The Mayor holds monthly casework surgeries in the Town Hall. To book an appointment, e-mail: mayor@hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 3269. Residents are first encouraged to contact their ward councillor. Civic and ceremonial duties are undertaken by the Speaker of Hackney, who is chosen annually from the borough's 57 councillors. The current Speaker is Cllr Soraya Adejare.

Have your say on shaping the Council's hate crime strategy

RESIDENTS are being asked to have their say on the Council's strategy to tackle hate crime in the borough.

Hate crime is defined as any criminal offence which a victim or anyone else thinks was motivated by hostility or prejudice based on disability, race, religion, transgender identity, or sexual orientation.

The Council's strategy sets out how it will work with the community and partner organisations to tackle hate crime, which increased by almost a third

“Hackney is a brilliant, diverse place, where people from all backgrounds live side by side”

(29 per cent) nationwide in 2016/17, compared to the previous year.

It sets out key aims on: building understanding of hate incidents and crime; building community resilience against extremist beliefs and attitudes; increasing the reporting of hate crime; ensuring that Council staff can respond to hate incidents by supporting the police; and improving support for the victims of hate crime.

Cllr Caroline Selman, Cabinet Member for Community Safety and Enforcement, said: “Hackney is a brilliant, diverse place, where people from all backgrounds live side by side. We know that our borough rejects racism and discrimination, celebrates our many faiths and cultures, and champions those from LGBTQI+ backgrounds and those with disabilities.

“However, we also know the importance of sending the message that Hackney is no place for hate, which is why we've developed this hate crime strategy and why it's so important that people respond to the consultation.”

To have your say, visit: consultation.hackney.gov.uk; or call: 020 8356 4342 to request a paper copy of the consultation.
